

Spring Carnival Committee found dead in office

"Tyan Rosh"
Numb

The CMU community is in shock after the discovery on Wednesday morning that all of Spring Carnival Committee (SCC) has died. An FMS maintenance worker discovered their remains in the SCC office on the third floor of the UC, and autopsy reports state that they had likely been dead for weeks. While students and faculty are mourning the loss of several upstanding members of the CMU community, they're also relieved to have an answer as to why so many delays occurred during preparations for Booth. "SCC was so slow to put out the form for booth chairs," one student stated on Midway. "If I'd known the directors of Booth were skeletons lying on the floor of the UC, I would've been fine with the delays. They just need to communicate better."

The cause of the numerous deaths is still unknown, but there are some clues. Some orgs suspect foul play, especially in light of recent tensions between SCC and SDC over their suspiciously similar names. Others suspect a gas leak, which may explain the increasingly confused actions SCC took in their final hours, perhaps reflecting a gradual loss of consciousness due to asphyxiation. Nevertheless Booth will continue, though further delays can be anticipated. Students took the opportunity prior to move-on to mourn the loss of SCC, as they waited half an hour past their scheduled times to be allowed onto Midway. CMU is urging students to remove their hard hats out of respect, and to drown their grief in copious amounts of alcohol during Carnival.

Dear Alumni,

"Tyan Rosh"
give him your money

Dear CMU alumni,
I know that you'll often get overly cheerful letters from CMU, saying how much they love you and how cool you must be, when all they really want is your money. We at readme detest this practice. In fact, we'd like to take the opportunity to tell you that we wish you'd just die already.

We need money. CMU is trying to starve us out, and stealing random first-years' IDs for print budget just doesn't pay the bills like it used to. We considered writing you a sincere little note about your cool little job and how readme could pave the way for younger CMU students to follow in your footsteps, but statistically, you're probably a piece of shit who works in the defense industry or investment banking.

If you flip this page over and turn it inside out, you'll find photos taken through the scope of a rifle, showing you throughout your daily routine. If you have a wife or children, they'll be in there too. We suggest folding $675 into the margins of this paper, in US dollars or KGBitcoin, and sliding it under the door to the Hamerschlag radio tower. Note that this will not save you, but only clear your conscience in your final days.

Hey Alums! Here's what's new on campus

Historian

Welcome back to campus, alumni! We hope that you have fun during carnival, and that the school brings back warm memories of your time here. CMU's changed a lot since you've graduated, but don't fear: readMe is here to get you up to speed.

Schatz has acquired its first Michelin star.

The premiere dining experience on CMU's campus is Schatz dining hall. We recommend alumni enjoy a delightful supper. However, be aware that the dress code is strictly enforced, and anything less than a suit will get you evicted from the premises. They didn't pay for 2nd-floor window access for nothing.

Entropy has reasonably priced items.

Following popular demand Entropy has re-evaluated its pricing scheme. The cost of a bag of chips has gone from 1 kidney to $13.99.

Walking to the sky has been extended by 1 foot.

We don't really know why they did this one. Make sure to remind current students that when you were here walking to the sky was a foot shorter. But only 'about', because you're mostly sure, and it used to seem a little taller anyway back before Gates was installed or whatever.

15-122 is now an easy light hearted class.

Current students don't know the pain they could have suffered. Make sure to point out that when you were here it was a real class and this generation doesn't know how good they have it. You had to walk to check-ins uphill both ways, after all.

CMU Football is all the rage.

Students have finally recognized the talent of our football players. There are rumors of plans for a new, larger football stadium in the works.

Unfortunately Donner is still here.

If there's one thing that will never change about CMU, it's the empty promise that Donner will be torn down. This time they really mean it, guys.

Booth Stuns CMU With Structural Anomaly

Johnny Truant
This is not for you

When Spring Carnival Committee began a routine structural check on what seemed to be an ordinary one-story booth, it certainly never expected to discover a scientific mystery that would stump even the greatest minds CMU has to offer. Yet that's exactly what happened when SCC checked the booth built by Zampanò's Literature club. During the structural check, it was discovered that the booth was a quarter inch bigger on the inside when compared to the outside.

ZLC's booth, themed after the hit documentary The Navidson Record, seemed laughably simple upon first glance. The walls are painted pitch black and there is no game for visitors to play. Although ZLC finished their structural work notably quicker than other blitz organizations, work on the booth ceased immediately afterwards. Nearby clubs noted that they never actually saw ZLC members working on the booth: Benner Rogers, a student at CMU working on booth for the CMU KGB, stated that the walls "just seemed to come up on their own." When questioned further, she explained that,

"I've never seen anyone step foot on their plot, but every time I left and came back something would be different. First it was the floor being finished. Then, new walls would pop up and get sheathed. And the really, I mean really weird thing was that it was all pre-painted. Even the wall frames are black..." With an uneasy glance at the booth, she quickly added, "I don't like to look at it much."

When the discovery of the booth's spatial anomaly was made, it was initially chalked up to human error. But for many, the explanation is far too little. Rogers is also dissatisfied with official explanations.

"I saw them measure the floor nearly fifty times. It's not human error. I know it's not. Something is seriously wrong in there and someone needs to find out what."

Due to the controversy, CMU administration have temporarily closed ZLC's booth for Carnival. A ZLC representative was not able to be located to comment.

Author's note: The night before this article was to be printed, Ms. Rogers sent me a letter. I have enclosed the text below in its entirety:

I did it. I finally went inside. And... the door is gone. I mean, it's still there on the outside. But on the inside... on the inside it just continues. There's just a hallway, just as black as the rest of the booth. I don't know how far it goes. I was too scared to go any further.

I'm going inside again tonight. I need to know what's at the end. This house is calling to me. I'll write back when I make it out alive.

Benner Rogers

Since writing this letter, Benner Rogers has reportedly gone missing. If you have any information on her whereabouts, please call the CMU Police Department.

Funny Pranks We Legally Can't Tell You To Pull During Carnival

Mihir Deshpande
Gets Harrisburg put under martial law every April 1st

Pulling pranks is great, just yesterday I pulled a hilarious prank where I put some opioids in a guys' beer. With Carnival leading to all kinds of people being out and about on campus, it's the perfect time for a little fun. But maybe you're tired of the same old boring schtick of screaming "FIRE" or yelling at hungover people through a megaphone. Not to worry, for the past thousand years I have been honing myself in the art doing a little trolling. So, let me tell you some of my favorite gags and gaffs to pull at Carnival.

First is a classic, the SWAT call. It's incredibly easy to pull off: call 911, say that someone has a bomb and is threatening to blow up the university, pretend to panic, hang up, then grab some popcorn and watch. Pretty quickly (depending on how many other pranks are occurring that day), there'll be a full SWAT team, armed and ready to kill on sight. After enjoying watching everyone freak out for a bit, you can inform them it was "just a prank bro." That automatically acts as a legal Get Out of Jail Free Card, so you can just laugh along with everyone about your funny joke - no harm, no foul. I personally have pulled this prank on friends, neighbors, churches, lemonade stands, and at my high school before I was expelled. So I can guarantee it'll always land.

If you want people to have their eyes on you, streaking is THE tried and true method. Doing this is even easier than a SWAT call: just take off all your clothes and run faster than CMUPD. This is guaranteed to draw the eyes of roaming students, alumni, parents, and children at Carnival, who'll all be mesmerized by the hilarity of your joke. I can personally attest that the sight of someone running from CMUPD in their birthday suit always draws laughs. It's a prank that can be enjoyed by everyone, some enjoying much more than others. Worried about revealing yourself to not be very well-endowed? No worries, just get absolutely wasted. That always solves my self-confidence issues. Last year I did this at my local Elementary school and everyone loved it, they all couldn't stop screaming with laughter.

Perhaps you really want to get an emotional reaction though. This isn't something I personally enjoy, but all you sadists out there may derive great pleasure from this. You've all probably seen those videos where people ask other people to do challenges, and then they reward them with large amounts of money for completing those challenges. Then there's also some tear jerking bit about how the money will change their lives or whatnot. So what you do is that you give them some really difficult to complete challenges (run a mile under ten minutes, walk across burning coals, etc.). Then when they finish, you bounce. Either just don't give them money or, if you're really sinister, just give them fake money for that emotional reaction. It'll be just like those fake challenge videos online, except this time only the money is fake.

Finally, the last prank I can tell you about is one time honored CMU tradition, gazorching. Don't know what gazorching is, just ask any member of staff or alumni, I'm sure they'd be happy to tell you. There isn't even a requirement to use water; I've found paint, hydrofluoric acid, mustard gas, agent orange, and radon to all be easy to obtain and extra effective as ammo. Gazorching already has the bonus of being a time honored CMU tradition. So go and gazorch all over the place! (This article was paid for by CMU Advocates for Gazorching)
